HIS PUBLICATION is presented for the satisfaction of the two hundred Junior College students, who, during the past college year, in many instances led the entire University System in scholastic attainment. All during the year they have had time to be active in college affairs, as the turning of these pages will attest.

The new down-town college building, a phase of education so emphasized by Northwestern, Fordham, New York University, Boston University, is now a reality in Atlanta. A building and equipment of $200,000 now allow students the privileges of modern lounges, a penthouse, solarium, recreation rooms, baths, and a well equipped theater.

The Junior College of the University System of Georgia is made possible by the State of Georgia, through the interest of the Chancellor and Board of Regents, for the hundreds of students of the Atlanta metropolitan area, who, for some reason, do not wish to leave Atlanta or attend another college until their last two years of college life.

Higher institutions, and especially those of the University System of Georgia, are encouraging junior college development through the Board of Regents, for carefully surveyed areas in the state.
